Suggestions from the competition yielding results

May 18th, 2011 | By Vic Gee

The ideas that readers sent in to Mind-mapping.org's recent competition are starting to bear fruit.

You can now comment at the blog or on Vic's Picks without needing to register. There is now a Mindmappers' Forum. Following suggestions that came up in the competition, I have added categories in the forum to cover: Case studies; Collaboration; ... (read the full article...)

Winners of iMindMap 5 Ultimate Licences

May 10th, 2011 | By Vic

Thank you to all who commented and made suggestions in the "How to improve Mind-mapping.Org" competition. I will be acting on many and have commented below. Meanwhile, here are the winners : Wojciech Korsak, Andrew Wilcox, Paf, Ivan J. Andrade and Waveydavey001. My decisions were based on the practicality for me to make the changes suggested and, where more than one person made a suggestion, the first one to make it.

Cayra is an imaginative, attractive mind/concept mapper that I've praised before. It is no longer supported but copies of the installer are still available. Today, @Kevin added a comment to the Cayra article in Vic's Picks where he volunteers to pick it up and develop it further, if he can get the source code.

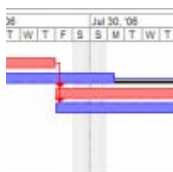

I've done some searching and found that the source code was released once under the GPL, but I can't find a copy of it now. Do you know where we may find a copy for Kevin, to the benefit of the mind mapping community?

A call to mind mapping software publishers

Mar 30th, 2011 | By Vic

Many users of mind mapping software use it for project management (amongst other things). Some mind mapping software has the ability to record task information, like start date, due date, estimated working time to complete, dependencies and percent complete. In addition, some packages can give alerts on approaching or past due dates, make Gantt charts, and export data to Microsoft Project and Outlook. These are the mind mapping applications (and

More visual genius of Walt Disney

Mar 10th, 2011 | By Vic

I'm sure you've seen the brilliant and ground-breaking concept map that Walt Disney drew in 1957. You should have, it's been on Mind-mapping.org since mid-2008 ... Well, here's another piece of outstanding visual thinking and communication apparently from even earlier – 1943 – and yet it looks fresh enough to have been designed yesterday: The Disney organization chart.

MindV – a new online mind mapper

Mar 4th, 2011 | By Vic

MindV is a new browser-based mind mapper that uses Silverlight. It has a ribbon interface and a surprisingly good selection of mind mapping functions for a version 1.0 product, with new features promised (more later). There are one or two rough edges, but the user interface and feel when editing maps already make it more like a desktop product.

It should be useful for project management – basic task information and other items can be stored with each node ... (read the full article...)

Organisation charts with backing – OrgPlus

Mar 3rd, 2011 | By Vic

OrgPlus is desktop software for enterprises. It is a visual front-end to an employee database back-end, with query functions to support Human Resources planning and, of course, organisation charts. OrgPlus provides a useful blend of serious data manager and attractive visual presentation. Vic Have you checked Vic's Faves yet? ## Cogimap – first mind mapping app for Blackberry PlayBook

Mar 1st, 2011 | By Vic

Before the Blackberry Playbook is even on sale, there's a mind mapping app: ***Cogimap***.

If the popularity of mind mapping apps on the iPad is a good indication, this one will be welcome to future PlayBook users. I often see comments that the iPad is worth it just for the ability to map on the move. But iThoughtsHD and iMindMap for iPad set a high bar.
